Short-Term Residential Treatment
for Substance Use and Addiction

What is Crossroads?

Renaissance Crossroads is a program designed to treat substance addiction among individuals struggling with concurrent substance use disorders and the associated consequences of that disorder. This may include, but is not limited to, those who are currently facing legal action, loss of family or other close relationships, parenting struggles, and employment issues. Renaissance Crossroads has a team of professionals who are dedicated to helping clients regain their lives.

Typical Course of Treatment

Renaissance Crossroads – Short-Term Care is a 4-month treatment program, which can be independently elected or included as part of a court sentence.

The program is comprised of process-oriented groups, psychoeducational groups, individual and family therapy, when appropriate, and attendance at 12-step meetings.

Crossroads works in conjunction with our outpatient clinic to provide seamless aftercare. Individuals are stepped down into intensive outpatient (IOP) and outpatient services at the conclusion of the inpatient treatment program.

Our case manager works with clients to assist them in developing a successful aftercare plan.

The primary focus of Renaissance Crossroads is to assist individuals in reintegrating into the community and living a lifestyle that is consistent with their values, abstaining from substances and sustaining a lifestyle consistent with recovery.

The goal of Renaissance Crossroads is to provide you with the treatment you need to get back to what really matters and maintain long-term abstinence from mood-altering chemicals.

Renaissance Crossroads does not currently offer detoxification or medication management of substance use disorders.

Psychiatry is available to qualified participants.
